The Infinity BassLink is small, and you can install it with ease. The same thing is apparent with the Kicker Hideaway, although the Infinity BassLink SM does require a bit more wiring. Still, the installation process is pretty impressive, and that's good. The Infinity BassLink has a passive radiator, which makes in a whole different monster. The grill is also more powerful here.

I read up about the Basslink, and was very apprehensive to install it, since it looked really small. The Basslink has two 10inch woofers in it. One of them is a powered sub (backed by a 200 Watt built-in amp) while the second one is a passive radiator which is just a woofer not backed by an amplifier.
