High Power Fiber Lasers — nLIGHT

High-power fiber lasers occupy probably the most challenging and demanding place in the whole field of fiber laser technology; they also are state of the art. Both continuous-wave (CW) and pulsed high-power fiber laser systems constantly require technological advances. This chapter describes the main challenges in the development of high-power fiber lasers—the solution of which creates a path to successful laser development.

We propose a novel high power random fiber laser (RFL) based on tapered fiber. It can overcome the power scaling limitation of RFL while maintaining good beam quality to a certain extent. An output power of 26.5 W has been achieved in a half-open cavity with one kilometer long tapered fiber whose core diameter gradually changes from 8 μ m to 20 μm.
