The selection of patients has traditionally been a manual procedure, and studies have shown that clinicians can miss up to 60% of the eligible patients [11, 13, 19, 37, 44, 48]. If the available records do not provide enough data, clinicians perform medical tests as part of the selection process.

Selection of Patients for Clinical Trials: An Interactive ...

The selection of patients for a therapeutic trial involves many often contradictory requirements [1,2]. In particular, subgroups of patients are selected, whereas the drugs are intended for a large population. Moreover, rapid results are needed, which justifies the recruitment of patients with a high degree of homogeneity.
