Neil Smith – Bang Crunch. Dan Coxon . It has become something of a self-fulfilling prophecy that the publishing industry can't sell debut short story collections. If it's a new collection by the likes of Richard Ford or William Trevor then they don't seem to struggle, but when it comes to unknown authors they're often reluctant to put substantial money behind anything other than a ...

Neil Smith - Bang Crunch - Spike Magazine

The story Bang Crunch by Neil Smith is a very interesting story written in an even more interesting way. Smith did not write this story in first person or third person, instead he chose to make the subject “you” and wrote it so that when readers read the story, it would be as if the story that is being told is about them.

Close Reading #2- Bang Crunch By Neil Smith

Bang Crunch. by Neil Smith. There is a school of writing – let’s call it the Dave Eggers school – that prizes cleverness above all other attributes. Not wit, mind you, but cleverness. The kind of cleverness that has an author craft a story about a widow who keeps her dead husband’s ashes in a curling stone, with which she carries on conversations. The kind of cleverness that has the ...

Bang Crunch | Quill and Quire

Bang Crunch is the story of the extraordinary Eepie Carpetrod, whose rare syndrome makes her live her life in fast forward, aging rapidly, racing

the short review: Bang Crunch by Neil Smith

Montreal-based translator Smith debuts with nine stories, some of which hit the mark. In The B9ers, a man forms a support group for people who have had benign tumors removed, and that's where the action stops: a weak subplot involving fraud by a representative of an orphanage fails to give the story much bite.
