This paper explores the relationship between Europeanization and multi-level governance. In particular, it assesses the extent to which Europeanization has promoted multi-level governance within Britain. In doing so, the paper draws on contributions to a UACES study group and ESRC seminar series on The Europeanization of British Politics and Policy-Making.

"Europeanization and Britain: Towards Multi-Level Governance?"

In terms of linking Europeanization to multi-level governance, the key indicator is whether EU policies, practices, and preferences increase the influence of subnational and non-state actors, either by redistributing resources in their favour (rationalist explanation) or by reshaping the preferences of domestic actors (reflectivist explanation); the effect in both cases is that influence over decision making and its outcomes becomes more diffuse.
