Insect chemical ecology (ICE) evolved as a discipline concerned with plant-insect interactions, and also with a strong focus on intraspecific pheromone-mediated communication. Progress in this field has rendered a more complete picture of how insects exploit chemical information in their surroundings in order to survive and navigate their world successfully.

Insect chemical ecology: chemically mediated interactions ...

Insect pheromones are essential components of monitoring and management tools targeting pests of agricultural crops. Mating disruption, mass trapping, attract-and-kill, and push-pull are some of the direct pest control strategies that depend on the use of pheromones. In the case of weevil pests, pheromones are produced by males to attract both males and females and are thus referred to as aggregation pheromones.

In insects, such as moths, pheromone information is transmitted by specialized olfactory receptor neurons (ORNs) to the macroglomerular complex (MGC), a male-specific part of the primary olfactory processing centre, the antennal lobe (AL). Plant odour information is transferred by general ORNs to sexually isomorphic ordinary glomeruli (OG) .

The transformations involved include conversion into insect alkaloids, metabolism to male pheromones, and transfer of alkaloids from males to females and further into eggs. While these lepidoptera selectively sequester certain compounds from plants in a complex pattern, the leaf beetle Chrysomela lapponica follows a different strategy.

Insect-Plant Interactions – Metabolism of Plant Compounds ...

Other insects produce or release sex pheromones in response to specific host plant cues, and chemicals from host plants often synergistically enhance the response of an insect to sex pheromones. Plant volatiles can also have inhibitory or repellent effects that interrupt insect responses to pheromones and attract predators and parasitoids to the attacking species after herbivory injury.

Pheromones are intraspecific semiochemicals, which mainly mediate the insect-to-insect interaction. These are further classified in to different types, depending upon their functions, such as sex pheromones, alarm pheromones, trail marking pheromones, territory marking pheromones, egg marking pheromones and aggregation pheromones [Nordlund 1981].

CHEMICAL ECOLOGY OF INSECTS AND TRITROPHIC INTERACTIONS

Insect-insect and plant-insect interactions In insects, the interaction of chemical signals can either stimulate or inhibit the behavior of the pest and so change its response. The response of insects to plant volatiles differs and is either attractive (adapted herbivore) or repellent (non-adapted herbivore).
