The best available correlations were selected by comparison with a data base of hundreds of reservoir-fluid studies of samples representing all areas of the free world involved in active petroleum exploitation from 1980 to 1986. Also, correlations of formation-water properties are given. Introduction. Values of reservoir liquid and gas properties are often needed when laboratory PVT data are not available.

Fluid property correlations. Relatively accurate correlations are available for estimating the key fluid properties of reservoir systems (Table 2). Standing and McCain give useful reviews of property correlations for oil and gas, and other correlations are available. Note, however, that for specific producing provinces (such as the Gulf Coast or the [[North Sea]]) more accurate correlations may exist.

The geologic time spiral. Petroleum reservoirs may contain any of the three fluid phases—water (brine), oil, or gas. The initial distribution of phases depends on depth, temperature, pressure, composition, historical migration, type of geological trap, and reservoir heterogeneity (that is, varying rock properties).
