Curious Minds How A Child

The old hometown is full of transplants and aliens interested only with making big money, not in promoting "curious minds" of children to become scientists. Thomas Wolfe was right, "You can't go home again." Because home is where you are, not the place you were born. That's a myth -- an illusion. Nothing is ever the same.

Curious Minds: How a Child Becomes a Scientist: Brockman ...

I picked up Curious Minds: How a Child Becomes a Scientist at our local library book sale, because I like to read about science, scientists and parenting. This is a collection of short autobiographical essays from an assortment of accomplished scientists (mostly psychologists and physicists), a few famous (Steven Pinker and Richard Dawkins), others less so but all authors of books.
