BPMN is used when designing and improving the business process, whereas BPEL is used when implementing it. Different requirements exist in different phases. Second, BPMN is used by business analysts, and BPEL is used by technical analysts and programmers. They use different paradigms and focus on separate issues when modeling a process.

Transforming BPMN into BPEL: Why and How

A.bpel file (and a template.wsdl file, if you have chosen to use any of the two non-empty templates) will be created. Each BPEL process needs a WSDL to expose itself as a web service (which means a BPEL process can be reused and treated as if it is just normal web service).
