Multimodal transcription, particularly as devised by Thibault (2000), provides an effective methodological tool in the analysis of audio-visual text. The method involves breaking down a film into single frames/shots/phases, and analyzing all the semiotic modalities operating in each frame/shot/phase. The purpose of the present article is to show how this methodology can be adopted (and adapted) to formulate strategies for subtitling, particularly in relation to the translation of Italian ...

(PDF) Multimodal pragmatics and translation: a new model ...

Sara Dicerto (auth.) This book proposes a new model for the translation-oriented analysis of multimodal source texts. The author guides the reader through semiotics, multimodality, pragmatics and translation studies on a quest for the meaning-making mechanics of texts that combine images and words. She openly challenges the traditional view that sees translators focusing their attention mostly on the linguistic aspect of source material in their work.

Making a multimodal transcript starts with choosing a methodological framework that is apt for doing multimodal analysis. These frameworks have distinctly different takes on multimodality and work with different notions of validity (see Chapter x of this volume), and that is reflected in the multimodal transcripts.

How to Transcribe Multimodal
