Building - Wikipedia

The fact that buildings and structures don't move tells us that the forces acting on them must indeed be balanced—and that's why we call these sorts of constructions static structures. If you've ever seen a building being demolished by a crane with a wrecker ball (a ball and chain), you will have noticed that buildings can stay up even with most of their walls knocked away.

How buildings work: the science of forces and static ...

The types of buildings were:- the cathedral church, the parish church, the monastery, the castle, the palace, the great hall and the gatehouse. Before the 20th century, the landmark building in almost every town was a church, cathedral, abbey, or town hall with its tall tower or spire rising high above all the houses.
