One of these practices is primary caregiving—the practice in which the care of each infant or toddler is assigned to one specific caregiver who is principally responsible for caring for that child in the care setting and communicating with the child’s family (Lally & Mangione, n.d.). Consistent, responsive, and meaningful interactions with a primary caregiver build a child’s attachment with a familiar adult (Raikes & Edwards, 2009).

The person who performs the lion’s share of these duties has historically been considered the child’s primary caretaker. When parents can’t agree on shared parenting, a judge will usually grant primary physical custody to the parent who has spent the most time caring for the child on a day-to-day basis, i.e., the child’s primary caretaker. The other parent will be awarded secondary physical custody.

Primary Care of the Child with a Chronic Condition, 5e ...

Primary Parent or Primary carer is a term to describe the parent who has most parenting time with the children after separation. The other parent is then known as the secondary parent - arguably less pejorative than terms like single parent (when in fact there are two parents) or Parent With Care. The term Primary Parent is also used colloquially to refer to the person who is principally looking after a child at a given point in time, regardless of parental relationship status.

Primary carer - Wikipedia

Pediatric autism spectrum disorder (ASD) consists of multisystem components that primary care providers (PCPs) must address. PCPs improve health outcomes associated with ASD when they administer developmental screening tools and thoroughly assess identified concerns.
