Drawing on inter-disciplinary perspectives from sensory anthropology and disability studies, it presents 'sensory-disabled' characters in a new light by refiguring them as individuals capable of employing strategies to destabilise the stigma imposed upon them and as tactical performers who can subversively achieve their social goals.

Introduction: Sense and Stigma - Oxford Scholarship

Self-stigma is created when people who have been labeled as “mentally ill” internalize the experience of stigma, experiencing low self-esteem and low levels of self-efficacy. 4 By internalizing stigma into self-stigma, one adopts the opinions and attitudes of his or her social surroundings, which negatively effects their self-esteem and quality of life. 5 This process of internalization shows that people are very much affected by the views and attitudes of others. How we construe our ...
