E Z Rules For The

E,Z will work -- even when cis,trans fails. In simple cases, such as 2-butene, Z corresponds to cis and E to trans. However, that is not a rule. This section and the following one illustrate some idiosyncrasies that happen when you try to compare the two systems. The real advantage of the E-Z system is that it will always work.

In the letter E, the horizontal strokes are all on the same side; in the E isomer, the higher priority groups are on opposite sides. In the letter Z, the horizontal strokes are on opposite sides; in the Z isomer, the groups are on the same side. Choose whichever of these methods make most sense to you.

E-Z notation for geometric isomerism

The R-S system is based on a set of "priority rules", which allow you to rank any groups. The rigorous IUPAC system for naming alkene isomers, called the E-Z system, is based on the same priority rules. These priority rules are often called the Cahn-Ingold-Prelog (CIP) rules, after

The general approach of the E-Z system is to observe the two groups at the end of each double bond. Then, analyze that the higher priority group at the one end of the double bond and the higher priority group at the other end of the double bond are on the same side (Z, from German zusammen = together) or the opposite sides (E, from German entgegen = opposite) of the double bond

The letters E and Z are conventionally printed in italic type, within parentheses, and separated from the rest of the name with a hyphen. They are always printed as full capitals (not in lowercase or small capitals), but do not constitute the first letter of the name for English capitalization rules (as in the example above).
