Making Space is written with a light touch, but with impeccable scholarship. It is extremely readable. (Randy Gallistel, Rutgers University) Groh deftly elucidates the mental computations that allow understanding of location and boundaries, interweaving well-judged snippets of history. The mechanisms, such as the brain's updates on eye movements, are fascinating--as is Groh's revelation that neurons can 'do double duty' in tasks such as spatial navigation and memory.
