Sparse Representations And Compressive Sensing

These measurements are usually much smaller than the number of samples that define the signal. From these small numbers of measurements, the signal is then reconstructed by non-linear procedure. Compressed sensing has recently emerged as a powerful tool for efficiently processing data in non-traditional ways. In this book, we highlight some of the key mathematical insights underlying sparse representation and compressed sensing and illustrate the role of these theories in classical vision, ...

Sparse Representations and Compressive Sensing for Imaging and Vision. Vishal M. Patel, Rama Chellappa. Compressed sensing or compressive sensing is a new concept in signal processing where one measures a small number of non-adaptive linear combinations of the signal. These measurements are usually much smaller than the number of samples that define the signal.

Among the topics the course will include (tentatively) sparse representations in streaming algorithms (can we keep statistics on network packets with very limited storage?), data structures and machine learning, and compressed sensing, which is a framework that studies how an unknown sparse vector can be recovered with much fewer measurements than the length of the vector (as in the camera example).

The signals may exhibit sparsity in either time-domain or frequency-domain. For example, the 50 Hz powerline signal is sparse in the frequency-domain and the impulse or spikes component is sparse in the time-domain. Dr. M. Sabarimalai Manikandan Sparse Representation and Compressive Sensing 11.

Compressed sensing exploits the fact that many signals are naturally sparse, or have a sparse representation on a given basis. In other words, this concept establishes that most of the energy from a signal is concentrated in either a small portion of its elements or its coefficients on a representation basis.

Structural Group Sparse Representation for Image Compressive Sensing Recovery. Abstract: Compressive Sensing (CS) theory shows that a signal can be decoded from many fewer measurements than suggested by the Nyquist sampling theory, when the signal is sparse in some domain. Most of conventional CS recovery approaches, however, exploited a set of fixed bases (e.g. DCT, wavelet, contour let and gradient domain) for the entirety of a signal, which are irrespective of the nonstationarity of ...

Abstract: Compressive Sensing (CS) is a new sensing modality, which compresses the signal being acquired at the time of sensing. Signals can have sparse or compressible representation either in original domain or in some transform domain. Relying on the sparsity of the signals, CS allows us to sample the signal at a rate much below the Nyquist sampling rate.

Compressed sensing is a new signal processing method that can relax the Shannon/Nyquist sampling significantly for signals that is sparse or compressible over a set of basis. Because the dominant modes at a certain blade-passing frequency are usually sparse [9] , it is very promising that compressed sensing method can be used to reduce the number of sampling rate, i.e., the number of sensors, significantly.
