The Emerald Light in the Air by Donald Antrim

Though no hellfire preacher appears, "The Emerald Light in the Air" has the backwoods atmosphere and possible salvation of a Flannery O'Connor story. Not all of the stories that Antrim has published in The New Yorker are included in The Emerald Light in the Air, which suggests that this selection has a thematic, as well as an imagistic, arc. In both the first and last pieces, a boy is a crucial agent, and a character is immersed in water; one appears to die, one survives.

In this story, shock therapy is the story, is the emerald light in the air. It is as if the story itself is the collapse and recovery surrounding the treatment, perhaps the delirium that can occupy the patient for the hour or so following the seizure. The story telling is deft; the slights of hand between reality and hallucination are fascinating.
