Quenching is a rapid way of bringing metal back to room temperature after heat treatment to prevent the cooling process from dramatically changing the metal's microstructure. Metalworkers do this by placing the hot metal into a liquid or sometimes forced air. The choice of liquid or the forced air is referred to as the medium.

Metal heats up quickly and is a better conductor of heat than glass. This means your food will have a more browned color and crispy edges. Keep in mind that aluminum or steel reacts with acidic foods, so stick to glass and ceramic when baking with tomatoes or citrus. Also bear in mind the finish of your metal pans.

Baking In Glass, Metal or Ceramic:

What's the Difference?

Persistence is key when you are using your first metal detector. The more time you spend searching, the more likely you are to find something really amazing! Tip #3.
