A given trait must be defined only by the alleles we're going to use in the genetic square. The blood type inheritance makes a good example of a trait that is perfect to use in the Punnett square calculator. The height of a child cannot be predicted using the Punnett square method - there are too many variables and genes affecting this trait.

Punnett Square Calculator - Traits and Genes Calculator

Each square in the Punnett square represents a blood type that the baby could have. Within each square, write the allele from the mother and the allele from the father that correspond to the row and column of that square. For example, you would fill in the first square with the "A" allele from the father and the "A" allele from the mother.

How to Determine Your Baby's Blood Type Using a Punnett Square

For the first set of parents, the man has type AB blood, the woman has type O blood and yet the victim has type B blood. Use the punnett square in order to determine if these people could possibly be the parents of the victim.

Blood Type Codominance Practice Problems

In humans, the ABO blood system is controlled by three alleles: IA, IB, and i. Betsy and Bob have two children named Billy and Belle. Betsy has type A blood and Bob has type B blood. Billy's blood is type AB, but Belle's blood type is type O. Use a Punnett Square to answer the questions below.

Human Genetics Practice Problems - Weebly

The filled-in Punnett squares would show all the possible genetic combinations based on the mother's and father's potential genotypes, according to Arizona State University. If a woman with type AB blood and a man with type B blood mated, a Punnett square could be used to determine the child's potential allele combinations for blood type, reports Arizona State University.
