The last drawing that we come to is the famous study of heads, one that of a man wiser in years, the other of a youthful ingénu, both of them included among the gathered apostles who stand below Mount Tabor in Raphael's award-winning painting The Transfiguration (Arts, 12 May), which he undertook in competition with Sebastiano's Raising of Lazarus. It is the humanity of both expressions and the subtle distinctiveness of their hands which give the drawing its inexpressible unity.
