Engine caused road failures are similar for both engines, usually a computer related sensor or harness that the computer controlled engine needs to run. The DT-466 is less costly to maintain, in my opinion, simply because it's less problematical and can go farther between oil changes than the T444E.

The harness runs very close to this area, and can cut, and short the harness. At the left rear of the engine valve cover, is a P-clamp mounting of the harness. This clamp, and the surrounding mounting area, can cause harness abrasion, and shorting. The harness is long enough, in these areas, to be relocated, after the repair, to prevent recurrence.
