Sociology In Action. The person who coined the term 'Sociology', Auguste Comte, suggested that there was a hierarchy of subjects, with Sociology sitting at the very top. Now, we are not necessarily suggesting that Sociology is better than all other subjects, but Auguste Comte makes an important point here. Unlike other academic subjects, which focus on just one area, Sociology, can and does, look at everything in the known human world.

Sociology in Action - University of Warwick

Max Weber believed that it was social actions that should be the focus of study in sociology. To Weber, a 'social action' was an action carried out by an individual to which an individual attached a meaning. Therefore, an action that a person does not think about cannot be a social action.
