Push and Pull Factors of International Migration

A Comparative Report

This study, begun in 1994, focussed on migration from the southern and eastern Mediterranean region, and from sub-Saharan Africa, to the European Union, with primary data collected for Turkey, Morocco and Egypt from the source countries, and Italy, Spain and Netherlands in the destination countries. Whilst overall 60 per cent of households in the source countries had no history of migrants, certain regions showed very high rates. In Morocco migration has become an all-pervasive phenomenon. Most migrants are men in their 20s or 30s, usually with higher educational levels than the rest of the population. Poverty is the spur to migration. The general pattern is of individual migration, involving men looking for a job or education, followed gradually over time by family reunification involving female migrants. Reasons for the choice of destination country varied, but family-related reasons were consistently important. The study also found that the intention to migrate appears difficult to realise, suggesting great potential for increased migration flows.

Mass Migration Under Sail

European Immigration to the Antebellum United States Cambridge University Press

Dr Cohn provides an in-depth and comprehensive analysis of the economic history of European immigration to the antebellum United States, using and evaluating the available data as well as presenting fresh data. This analysis centers on immigration from the three most important source countries - Ireland, Germany, and Great Britain - and examines the volume of immigration, how many individuals came from each country during the antebellum period, and why those numbers increased. The book also analyzes where they came from within each country; who chose to immigrate; the immigrants' trip to the United States, including estimates of mortality on the Atlantic crossing; the jobs obtained in the United States by the immigrants, along with their geographic location; and the economic effects of immigration on both the immigrants and the antebellum United States. No other book examines so many different economic aspects of antebellum immigration.

Abstract: As the progress of globalization and internationalization, higher education has also entered into the stage of globalizing. Global student mobility, as one of the most obvious representatives of the globalization of higher education, has earned international awareness and attention as a wide spread social issue all over the world. China, as a pioneer to promote the progress of globalization, has become world's largest student exporting country. It is owing to the fact that with the fast advancement of social and economical condition in China, the rising income level of middle class families has boosted the desire for Chinese students to pursuit perceived better education overseas. However, one of the most serious unexpected outcomes caused by this trend of studying overseas is the issue of brain drain, since large number of Chinese overseas students never came back after graduation. Yet, with the fluctuation of the world economical situation, the growth of China's economical and political power is attracting more and more Chinese overseas graduates back to work. Hence, it is necessary to analyze the factors that influence Chinese students' behavior of 'going out' and 'coming back', which is also the theme of this paper. Specifically, both of the push and pull factors that caused Chinese international students' decisions of coming back home after graduation will be discussed. DOI: 10.5353/th_b5396435 Subjects: Returned students - China Chinese students - Foreign countries

The Relationships Between 'push' and 'pull' Factors of Millennial Generation Tourists to Heritage Tourism Destinations

Antebellum and Civil War Sites in the State of Arkansas

This study investigated "push" and "pull" motivational factors which influence millennial generation tourists' decisions to visit heritage tourism destinations and their knowledge of Civil War and antebellum heritage sites within the state of Arkansas. A descriptive, six-section survey was distributed to millennial students from varying degree fields at three universities within Arkansas. Four hundred twenty-four participants completed the questionnaire with measures of demographic information, visitation and frequency to heritage tourism sites, push factors, pull factors, heritage tourism sites in Arkansas, and historic preservation participation. The results of this study showed that although millennial students do not visit heritage sites frequently, there are certain sets of push and pull motivational factors that influence their decisions to visit these sites, including knowledge driven factors (push) and historical factors (pull). Results also showed that many students attending universities in the state recognized heritage sites in the most densely populated areas, but did not recognize those in the less populated areas; although, many stated they would like to visit them. Lastly, the results of this study suggest that although millennial students find historic preservation to be important, a majority of them do not participate in preservation efforts.

China's Outward FDI

A Study of Push and Pull Factors LAP Lambert Academic Publishing

This study is an attempt to identify China's outward FDI. The factors have been separated into push and pull factors. The pull factors are studied through panel OLS, while the co-integration method and ECM are used to identify the push factors. Internalization Theory is the main conceptual framework. This result shows Asian exports of fundamental products and GDP per person employed are positively associated the OFDI. However, regulatory quality is negative. For the push factors, China's foreign reserves, exchange rate, patents and wage are found to positively impact outward FDI. Nonetheless, China's export and saving rate are negatively associated with China's OFDI. Then the ECM shows that China's exchange rate has negatively associated with China's OFDI at 15% significance. When Chinese's policies supported its OFDI since 2000, its OFDI increased rapidly.
