Your accountant should be very clear regarding their role in your business, responsibilities, and what their plan of action is for your company. If they are unwilling to share that information with you, they probably aren't adding much value to your business.

5 Signs You Should Fire Your Accountant

When firing your accountant, it is typically best to write a letter informing him that you no longer need his services and requesting that he hand over all of your original documents.

Avoid giving reasons, at least until after you have received your documents; otherwise, he may lack the motivation to move quickly, especially if he feels that you've just insulted him.
