The British, French, Russian and Dutch empires each governed more Muslims than any independent Muslim state. European politicians and colonial officials believed Islam to be of great political significance, and were quite cautious when it came to matters of the religious life of their Muslim subjects.

Islam and the European Empires -

Oxford Scholarship

Abstract. This essay surveys literature on the engagement of different European empires, including the French, British, Dutch, Russian, and German, with Islam. While the history of Islam and empire has attracted the attention of scholars for decades, most of their studies have been written primarily as contributions to the historiography of a specific empire or a distinct geographic region and rarely refer to research on other imperial powers, even though the questions and themes raised are ...

Muslims formed an integral part of the European empires, just as Muslim powers like Persia or the Ottoman empire accommodated Christians and Jews as dhimmis for centuries.⁶ From the beginning of the European expansion into Muslim lands, imperial authorities not only made

In the current climate of anxiety about the relationship between Europe and the Islamic world, it is easy to forget that it has a very long history—as old, indeed, as the seventh-century clash between the Byzantine empire and the first caliphate with its capital in Damascus. Muslims ruled over Christians, and Christians, in the crusading era, over Muslims.
