The #1 injector is factory set so it is checked for proper position and once that setting is done the other injector racks are checked for the correct travel. When they are all adjusted within the proper parameters the next step is injection timing. The engine has to be positioned properly for this adjustment. The valves can be adjusted at the same time with two revolutions of the engine. The full fuel needs to be checked as well.

On the early 3306 with compact scroll fuel pumps there is no provision to centre the rack (no pin or spacer block) on the pump itself. You need the rack setting tool group to centre the rack . Also on the early pumps some had a speed limiter plunger which limited governor lever travel to low idle until oil pressure built up to override the plunger.
