Looping is required when we need to process something repetitively until a certain condition is met. For example, we can design a program that adds a series of numbers until the sum exceeds a certain value. We can also write a program that prompts the user to enter data repeatedly until he or she enters the word 'Finish'. In Visual Basic 2012, there are three types of Loops, they are the For.....Next loop, the Do loop. and the While.....End while loop.

My old VB6 program loads all the stock codes into a hidden drop down box that I re-position over the top of the stock code text box (the program used text boxes instead of a data grid view). The VB6 program works no problem, takes maybe a second to initialise. I've used this to put the data into a DataGridViewComboBoxColumn:
