Promising Practices for Clinical Experience. The National Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education (NCATE) has challenged educator preparation programs to make clinical experience a primary focus of teacher training, and many are responding to that challenge. According to the National Comprehensive Center for Teacher Quality (Personal communication, May, 2012), there is a trend to start clinical experiences early—some even during a student's freshman year; however, they are ...

Teacher Preparation Programs: Research and Promising Practices

A promising practice is an initiative that shows potential as a result of its planning, implementation, results and evaluation. The promising practices available at Teach Resiliency are from the Share2Care mental health activation campaign. These initiatives have been assessed by a committee of reviewers and have been identified as quality initiatives that can be considered for replication across the country.
