Water Injection Gasoline Engine

Water Injection and cooled exhaust gas recirculation (EGR) could be seen as competitive technologies: it has been demonstrated that at medium load a 40-50 % Water-to-Fuel Ratio (WFR) with Port Water Injection (PWI) has the same effect as an EGR-rate of 10%, which is seen as relatively limited even for petrol engines. However, Water Injection has some benefits when compared to EGR, especially a better controllability as this is not a closed-loop as EGR, the timing of injection is not linked ...

Just as a fireman sprays water onto a fire to cool it down the water injection in an engine helps to quell ignition. It will literally slow up the burn of fuel and enable a more thorough combustion process. Some advocates of water injection list the cleaning effect this has on the engine and head but this is not a primary consideration.

Benefits and drawbacks of engine water injection systems

Homemade Water Injection for Auto Engines. by Joshua Bailey. Automobile engines produce unrelenting amounts of useless heat. An easy yet mechanically invasive way to remove much of the engines heat is through water/methanol injection. In conjunction with an aftermarket bolt-on and a fresh engine tune, these systems can improve the efficiency, power and longevity of gasoline engines.

Homemade Water Injection for Auto Engines | It Still Runs

Water/methanol injection for gas engines is a proven means for effectively reducing engine inlet air temperatures and suppressing harmful detonation on high compression naturally aspirated (NA) race engines. This allows racers to reliably increase boost and advance ignition timing—without using high-octane racing fuel—for improved power gains.

Gasoline or diesel, carbureted or fuel-injected, naturally aspirated or forced induction—no matter what your application, we’ve got a methanol injection kit for you.

Water/Methanol Injection Systems at Summit Racing

The injection mixes methanol and water to reduce intake temperatures, sometimes by up to 100F. At the same time, this process will steam-clean the engine because the moisture vaporizes due to the heat. There’s not enough water to harm the engine, while the methanol remains compatible with the standard gasoline may vehicles use.
