Frame analysis as rhetorical criticism
[edit | edit source]

Although the idea of language-framing had been explored earlier by Kenneth Burke

(terministic screens), political communication researcher Jim A. Kuypers first published work advancing "framing analysis" as a rhetorical perspective in 1997. His approach begins inductively by looking for themes that persist across time in a text (for Kuypers, primarily news narratives on an issue or event) and then determining how those themes are ...
