Supervised Sequence Labelling With Recurrent

Supervised sequence labelling refers specifically to those cases where a set of hand-transcribed sequences is provided for algorithm training. What distinguishes such problems from the traditional framework of supervised pattern classification is that the individual data points cannot be assumed to be independent.

Supervised Sequence Labelling with Recurrent Neural Networks

Recurrent neural networks are powerful sequence learning tools—robust to input noise and distortion, able to exploit long-range contextual information—that would seem ideally suited to such problems. However their role in large-scale sequence labelling systems has so far been auxiliary.

Supervised Sequence Labelling with Recurrent Neural Networks

Recurrent neural networks are powerful sequence learners. They are able to incorporate context information in a flexible way, and are robust to localised distortions of the input data. These properties make them well suited to sequence labelling, where input sequences are transcribed with streams of labels. The aim of this thesis is to advance the state-of-the-art in supervised sequence labelling with recurrent networks.
