As Llewellyn Vaughan-Lee explains in The Return of the Feminine and the World Soul, the masculine and feminine are beginning to understand how to hold the tension necessary to create the space needed for this to occur. This book nurtures our ability to listen from within our hearts and restores the dignity and value of feminine wisdom, and points to what is possible when imagination leads."

World-Soul, soul ascribed to the physical universe, on the analogy of the soul ascribed to human beings and other living organisms. This concept of a spiritual principle, intelligence, or mind present in the world's body received its Classical Western expression in the writings of Plato (5th century bc) and Plotinus (3rd century ad). It may be related to the common archaic notion of the ensoulment of all things (see animism).
