In Gestalt therapy, the therapist is to work on the "how" of the person's experience. Not the "why". They want to understand how the patient faces problems and how he lives with them. How he feels them and internalizes them. To do so, we must make space to identify what his emotions and current sensations are. We elicit this information by saying things like, "tell me what you are feeling", "tell me where you are feeling it", "explain to me what you can see in right now".
