Heat Transfer In The Atmosphere

In the atmosphere, conduction is more effective at lower altitudes where air density is higher; transfers heat upward to where the molecules are spread further apart or transfers heat laterally from a warmer to a cooler spot, where the molecules are moving less vigorously. Heat transfer by movement of heated materials is called convection. Heat that radiates from the ground initiates convection cells in the atmosphere.

Heat Transfer in the Atmosphere | Physical Geography

Heat is transported in the atmosphere in the following ways: through convection (including advection), that is, through the horizontal and vertical transport of air; through radiation; through transfer by means of the evaporation of water and the condensation of water vapor; and, to an insignificant degree, through molecular heat conduction.

Heat radiates from the ground into the lower atmosphere. In conduction, heat moves from areas of more heat to areas of less heat by direct contact.

By these transformations from one class of energy into another, the CO₂ emits radiant energy (energy in transit or heat), which is transferred by convection to the upper atmosphere layers. After it has been transferred to the upper layers of the atmosphere, the heat is released to the outer space (Heat Sink).

Heat Transfer, Conduction, Convection and Radiation

Thermal energy is transferred from hot places to cold places by convection. Convection occurs when warmer areas of a liquid or gas rise to cooler areas in the liquid or gas. Cooler liquid or gas then takes the place of the warmer areas which have risen higher. This results in a continuous circulation pattern.

Conduction in the Atmosphere Conduction, radiation and convection all play a role in moving heat between Earth's surface and the atmosphere. Since air is a poor conductor, most energy transfer by conduction occurs right near Earth's surface. Conduction directly affects air temperature only a few centimeters into the atmosphere.

Conduction | UCAR Center for Science Education

In the Earth-atmosphere system, latent heat transfer occurs when water evaporates from a moist land surface or from open water, moving heat from the surface to the atmosphere. That latent heat is later released as sensible heat, often far away, when the water vapor condenses to form water droplets or snow crystals.
