A Box Of Matches Nicholson

A Box of Matches is concerned with the minutiae of one person's life through a small window of time across a few days. The beauty here is that Baker has discarded much of the brash intellectualism of his previous books and just tells it as it is. This book has a much more human feel to it, and there is almost an air of sadness throughout the book.

'A Box of Matches' - The New York Times

A Box of Matches is both the title and central metaphor of Nicholson Baker's new novel. The narrator uses matches each morning to build a pre-dawn fire, and his small matchbox also represents the contained days of an ordinary life. While conventional novels have a central conflict that builds to a crisis point, A Box of Matches works on a cyclical, postmodernist plane.
