Blended Learning in Teacher Education: Uncovering its ...

There are various definitions of the term "blended learning". It is fairly common, as Garrison and Kanuka (2004) suggest, to consider that "At its simplest, blended learning is the thoughtful integration of classroom face-to-face learning experiences with online learning experiences" [1]. Blended learning approaches are often considered as a continuum, ranging from mainly face-to-face activity with fairly limited use of technology to the delivery of courses entirely online.

The use of technology in the corporate setting has led to an increased preference for blended learning techniques. Blended learning streamlines the training process, and gives the ability to deliver engaging training to a large number of learners, all over the world – i.e. it enables a wider reach. For learners, a blended learning approach means that they can access training resources outside scheduled face-to-face training sessions.
