Every quarter, the hospital where I work has a memorial service in honor of those who have died at the hospital in the last months. It is a time when families and friends come together in a small auditorium for a short ritual remembering of their loved one who is no longer with them in body. One of my favorite parts of this service is when each person is given the opportunity to stand in front of the others and give voice to who their loved one was and what meaning they gave (and still give ...
