Strabismus is one of the most common conditions treated by pediatric ophthalmologists. This condition involves a misalignment of the eyes. Their expertise in treating strabismus in children leads some pediatric ophthalmologists to handle adult strabismus as well.

Pediatric Ophthalmology and Strabismus - Dean McGee Eye ...

Most strabismus is the result of an abnormality of the neuromuscular (including brain) control of eye movement. Our understanding of these control centers in the brain remains incomplete. Less commonly, a problem with the actual eye muscle may cause strabismus. How is strabismus related to poor vision? Eye misalignment can cause amblyopia in children. When the eyes are oriented in different directions, the brain receives 2 different visual images.
