The Spiritual Brain A Neuroscientists

"The Spiritual Brain" explains how such experiences work and the difference they make in the lives of the individual, powerfully arguing for what many in science are loathe to consider - that it is God that creates religious experiences, not the brain. Most neuroscientists are committed to the view that mystical experiences are simply the result of random neurons firing, or as one scientist puts it, they are merely 'delusions created by the brain.'

We now know the neuroscience behind a spiritual awakening ...

Beauregard himself is a neuroscientist that has researched the brain activity of Carmelite nuns during mystical experience. The good parts of the book provide some evidence for his claim according to which mind and consciousness aren't reducible to just brain activity.

The Spiritual Brain: A Neuroscientist's Case for the ...

The 3Q brain (IQ+EQ+SQ=3Q) is optimised neurologically for spiritual intelligence. The default setting of attention in the 3Q brain is at the subject-pole of attention, not at the object-pole of attention. The 3Q brain therefore replaces the ego with the soul, both as the seat of personal identity, and as the governor of IQ and EQ. The 3Q brain uses IQ and EQ not to pursue the goals of the ego, but to express the qualities of the soul, which are experienced at the subject-pole of attention ...

The Neuroscience of Spiritual Intelligence

Adding to the debate in their recent work, The Spiritual Brain: A Neuroscientist's Case for the Existence of the Soul, Mario Beauregard, a neuroscientist at the University of Montreal, and Denyse O'Leary, a free-lance science and religion writer based in Toronto, have applied the rigors of neuroscience to spirituality in an effort not only to challenge the despotism of materialism in the profession, which, according to the authors, "does not bear up well under close examination," but ...
